Brooklyn College of the City University of New York
Bedford Avenue and Avenue H Brooklyn, New York 11210

School of Humanities

Department of Television and Radio

4 January 1984

Irv Drasnin
180 East 79th Street
New York, New York 10021

Dear Irv:

My graduate seminar in Public Television Programming met for the final time last night, winding up a semester that was without any question the most productive in the eight years I've been doing this sort of thing.

Much of the credit for that must go to you, and to the other professionals, who were willing to give up an evening to meet with the group and to give them the benefit of your insights into the crazy business of public television production.

Your session on "Searching for Mao" proved more stimulating and provocative than a professor has any right to expect of a guest, particularly one who has volunteered his time. I am all the more grateful to you for volunteering your services at a time when you are up to your elbows in thoroughbred horses!

I suspect the students made known to you, in their own ways, their gratitude and pleasure at the session. I simply wanted to add my own expression of thanks. I hope one day you'll give me a chance to return the favor.

With best wishes for a productive and satisfying New Year,

Jim

James Day
Professor